Saving Strategy: PAY YOURSELF FIRST

Paying yourself first is a simple but effective strategy for saving up for your long-term goals

HOW IT WORKS

As soon as you get paid, put money into your savings account first Set aside a portion of your income to save before you pay bills or buy groceries—the size of that contribution is up to you ($100 is a great starting point), but even small amounts will add up over time

THE BENEFITS OF PAYING YOURSELF FIRST:

When you pay yourself first, you get used to saving regularly. You begin to treat your savings with the same importance and priority as a bill-it's an essential part of your financial wellbeing and not just a "nice-to-have." YOU CAN SPEND GUILT-FREE contributed to your savings goals before allocating your spending money. The result: you get to shop without worrying that you may be shortchanging your long-term goals.

YOU GET IN THE HABIT

Paying yourself first means you've throw at you. Paying yourself first means that you won't be scrambling the next time you have to pay an emergency expense.

DID YOU KNOW... Paying yourself first is a strategy you can pair with any savings goal—examples include emergency fund savings, retirement savings, saving for a down payment for real estate or even saving up for travel!

AUTOMATE YOUR SAVINGS

Put your savings plan on autopilot with these tips:

Take advantage of any retirement savings plans offered through your employer

deposited directly into your savings account

See if you can have a portion of your paycheck

RECT DEPOSIT

AUTOMATIC BILL PAY Avoid late fees and missed payments by signing up for

AUTOMATIC TRANSFERS

Schedule a repeating automatic transfer from your checking account to your savings account automatic bill pay for your regular expenses

Sources: Investopedia, Harvard Business

It's a Money Thing is a registered trademark of Currency Marketing

Publishing